

*Reaching Florida's Students
One School at a Time*

Justice Teaching is designed to bring the constitutional doctrines of our government into vivid focus for the next generations. It calls on judges and lawyers to serve as resources for the teachers and students in each and every elementary, middle and high school in Florida.

Justice Teaching needs judges and attorneys to be matched with a school in their community. Training will be offered throughout the state to prepare volunteers to go into classrooms in early 2007. Justice Teaching will provide judges and lawyers with lesson plans that have proven effective in engaging students in exciting exchanges about our justice system and how it impacts their lives.

Interested volunteers should go to www.justiceteaching.org to sign up electronically and learn more about the initiative. You also can E-mail the program at justiceteaching@flcourts.org.

When Chief Justice R. Fred Lewis announced the initiative in June 2006, he described it as “working to fulfill the promise of this democracy” and pledged that Justice Teaching would be the most comprehensive approach to civic education ever attempted – and realized.

The select committee created to implement Justice Teaching includes judges from each of the five District Courts of Appeal and 20 judicial circuits as well as leaders of The Florida Bar, the Florida Association of District School Superintendents and The Florida Law Related Education Association.

Justice Teaching aims to benefit students by promoting understanding of Florida's justice system and laws, developing critical thinking and problem-solving skills, and demonstrating the effective interaction of courts within the constitutional structure of our government. CLE credit is available for most Justice Teaching training programs.
