DISSERTATION:

“Electoral Competition and the Structure of State Legislatures: Organizational Complexity and Party Building”

This study is concerned with the linkages between electoral competition and party organizational change in 15 transforming and formerly one-party chambers. The general thesis is that as competition increases in the electoral realm, changes result in the pattern of committee appointments and the organization of party caucuses. These changes, in turn, affect the formal organizational and institutional strategies of both political parties in the chamber. As these transformations unfold, patterns of roll call voting also change as a result.

ⁱ Each year, the Department of Political Science at FSC invites Upper College students to travel to the SPSA to present their original research. Every two years, we do the same at The Citadel Symposium on Southern Politics at The Citadel, Charleston, SC. We also encourage students in the Lower College to present their original research at the Florida Political Science Association and Fiat Lux at FSC. This year – 2016 – Florida Southern College will host the Florida Political Science Association annual meetings, and our students will be the major staff of the conference, as well as fulfilling their roles as presenters.
