Biographical/Historical Sketch

During the late 1940s, the citrus industry in Florida experienced severe market fluctuations. Prices did not cover the cost of production and growers were losing money. The Citrus Exchange determined that the industry needed an organization dedicated to stabilizing prices. Consequently, the idea for Florida Citrus Mutual (FCM) was born. FCM began operating in 1948, though it wasn't officially activated until March 25, 1949. Several key men in the citrus industry strongly supported FCM's cause and are largely responsible for recruiting members as well as getting the organization on its feet. These men are known as Mutual's founding fathers: Latt Maxcy, Barney Kilgore, C.C. Commander, J.A. Griffin and James C. Morton.

When FCM finally began operating in 1948, it had more than 6,000 grower members. The Board was organized to have 21 directors (who are grower-members that represent each of the seven districts), a general manager and several department heads. In the beginning, FCM's primary goal was to raise prices for growers; however, they also provided important price information, which had never before been published. Today, FCM works on issues including international trade, pest and disease, grower legislation, taxation, citrus research, and providing reliable market information and non-price information.
